Act — II Scene — IX [Prince of Arragon]

First Arragon takes his oath. Then he reminds the three conditions of his oath —
1. Never inform anyone about the casket he chosen
2. Never marry anyone in life
3. If chooses wrong casket, then to leave without any argument.

The beard was desired by majority of men, but majority only consists of the person (which are fools) [majority is like a matador bird]. He praises what was written on the silver casket as according to him one only got what much he deserves.

Then he chooses the silver casket for him.
4. Inside that found a photo of idiot and then questions himself that is this is what much he deserves.

It was written on the scroll that:

- The right person will choose the right thing.
- Seven times and never made a mistake in choosing a right thing.
- You have chosen a idiotic decision and now go from here.

Now Arragon also thinks that he is also a fool and while returning there were two idiots in which one was Arragon and other was Arragon's portrait.

Then Portfo says that these suitors are as attracted to the cascade as moth is attracted towards the Burnish candle.

Then the servant enters, most inform him about a new suitor to Portfo, who was well-ly mannered and carrying gifts with him.
